JAMES S. GWIN, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE:

The parties in this employment discrimination case jointly propose a protective order allowing them to limit public disclosure of information they designate as confidential. [Doc. 31.] Granting a protective order motion is within the trial court's discretion, but that discretion "is circumscribed by a long-established legal tradition' which values public access to court proceedings." *Procter & Gamble Co. v. Bankers Trust Co.*, 78 F.3d 219, 227 \(6th Cir. 1996\) (quoting *Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Fed. Trade Comm'n*, 710 F.2d 1165, 1177 \(6th Cir. 1983\)). Unwarranted restriction of court documents hampers the public's ability to act as an important check on judicial integrity. See *Brown & Williamson*, 710 F.2d at 1179; see also *Wilson v. Am. Motors Corp.*, 759 F.2d 1568, 1570 \(11th Cir. 1985\) (observing that "trials are public proceedings" and that access to court records preserves "the rights of the public, an absent third party"). In the Sixth Circuit, courts approach protective order motions with a presumption in favor of public access to judicial records. See, e.g., In re Perrigo Co., 128 F.3d 430, 447 (6th Cir. 1997).

Similarly, the Judicial Conference disfavors the sealing of civil cases, except as a last resort. See Judicial Conference of the United States, Preliminary Report Judicial Conference Actions (September 13, 2011) (adopting a policy of sealing case files only where “required by statute or rule or justified by a showing of extraordinary circumstances and the absence of narrower feasible and effective alternatives ... so that sealing an entire case file is a last resort”).

Moreover, the fact that all parties jointly seek a protective order does not overcome this presumption. See Proctor & Gamble Co., 78 F.3d at 227 (warning district courts against “abdicat[ing] their responsibility to oversee the discovery process and to determine whether filings should be made available to the public” and against “turn[ing] this function over to the parties,” which would be “a violation not only of Rule 26(c) but of the principles so painstakingly discussed in Brown & Williamson”).

A successful protective order motion must show specifically that disclosure of particular information would cause serious competitive or financial harm. See, e.g., Brown & Williamson, 710 F.2d at 1179-80. Here, the movants fail to meet this standard. The proposed confidentiality agreement is exceedingly broad and unspecific. The movants ask for blanket authority to designate documents as confidential that they mark as “Confidential.” [Doc. 31-1.] However, they have failed to show that public disclosure of any information might cause serious harm or is otherwise warranted.

The movants may move to seal individual documents provided that they make the requisite particularized showing. For example, upon a proper motion, the Court will consider limiting public disclosure of information pertaining to sexually explicit and embarrassing materials involving a nonparty. However, the Court will not simply grant the parties blanket authorization to cloak the entire case under a veil. The Court thus DENIES the proposed confidentiality agreement.

IT IS SO ORDERED.
